Collection Overview

Description: Clark Kerr Personal and Professional Papers documents Kerr’s life as an educator, labor negotiator, and, most importantly, as chancellor of UC Berkeley and then president of the University of California system. The collection spans his professional career from the beginning of his work in labor relations to his last great work, his memoir, The Gold and the Blue: A Personal Memoir of the University of California, 1949-1967. The collection contains personal, professional, and family papers (including correspondence and papers of his parents and grandparents) of Clark Kerr, including University of California administrative records, writings, speeches, correspondence, awards, committee papers, and photographs.

California Assembly Bill 32 (AB 32), passed in 2006, mandates reductions in California's greenhouse gas emissions to 1990 levels by 2020. Charged with implementing the bill, the California Air Resources Board has identified emissions reduction strategies, including using such agriculture. The goals set for agriculture are voluntary, but because the agricultural sector represents a significant portion of both the state's economy and its greenhouse gas emissions, they offer considerable opportunities for mitigation activities. To reduce compliance costs, the Board's plan includes a cap-and-trade program that allows for offsets to be purchased from nonregulated firms that undertake mitigation in or outside the state. However, methodologies are needed to assess the impact of mitigating activities. Without them, emission reductions are expected to fall short of potential. We review an existing international mechanism — the Kyoto Protocol's Clean Development Mechanism (CDM) — that offers a framework for assessing offsets.

In 2006, the California legislature passed Assembly Bill 32 (AB 32), the Global Warming Solutions Act of 2006 (ABR 2006), which requires California to reduce greenhouse gas emissions to the 1990 level of 427 million metric tons of CO2e by 2020. This amounts to a 15% reduction in 2008 levels and a 30% reduction in levels that would occur by 2020 if no actions were taken. AB 32 directs the California Air Resources Board (ARB) to develop a

What is a metric ton of carbon dioxide?

Driving from Los Angeles to Washington, D.C. — assuming that a full tank of gasoline yields an average of 300 miles — produces the equivalent of about 1 metric ton of carbon dioxide (CO2) in emissions (Ha 2012).
